ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE SLAVE SHIP.

The Slave Ship was winding her course o'er the ocean,
The winds and the waters had sunk into rest,
All hush'd was the wheel of the tempest's commotion,
That late had awaken'd the sailor's devotion,
When terror had kindled remorse in his breast.

And onward she rode though by curses attended,
Tho' heavy with guilt was the freight that she bore;
Tho' with shrieks of despair was the midnight air rended,
And ceaseless the groans of the wretches ascended,
That from friends and from country forever she tore.

On the deck, with his head on his fetter'd hand leaning,
He, who once was a chief, and warrior, stood;
Nor sorrow he gain'd, by his woes unmolested,
To think o'er his woes, and the fate he detested,
Till madness was firing his brain and his blood.

"Oh, never!" he murmur'd in anguish, "no, never!
These limbs shall be bent to the menial's toil!
They have rift me, my bride—but they shall not forever
Your chief from his home and his country dissever—
No! never will I be the conqueror's spoil!"

"Say! long didst thou wait for my coming, my mother!
Did ye tend o'er the desert, my sisters, your eye!
And weep at the lengthen'd delay of your brother,
As each slow passing moment was chased by another,
And still he appeared not your tear-drop to dry!"

"But ye shall—yes, again ye shall fondly embrace me!
We will meet, my young bride, in the land of the blest!
Death, death, once again in my country shall place me,
One bound shall forever from fetters release me!"
He burst them! and sunk in the ocean's dark breast. EMILY.

Lines on reading the "Isle of flowers," written by Rosa.

And say, why not go to this "beautiful Isle"
Where Nature's gay charms so transcendently smile—
Where flowers luxuriant sport in the gale,
And mingle their breath with the breeze you inhale?
Where the orange, the citron, their sweetness unfold,
Which appear to the eye polish'd clusters of gold;
And yield their perfume to the zephyrs that play
Thro' the blossoms enrich'd by the sun's mellow ray;
Or playfully dimple the crystalized tide,
O'er whose bosom so mild would our fairy bark glide:
Then from home and its charms, oh! will you not go
To this "beautiful Isle?" nay, do not say no!
For sure in a clime so delightful as this,
E'en an Exile would find a fond haven of bliss.

Ah! who would not go where these pleasures arise,
And dwell with delight 'neath those mild summer skies;
Where songsters their sweetest melodies pour
Thro' each emerald grove or fragrant bower—
Where down in the depths of the ever stratified main,
Rich "insects," or caves of bright coral are seen,
And think you not love, in this "beautiful Isle,"
You would meet with those friends, or sympathy's smile—
Or souls that are noble and generous as here;
Or scenes of gay pleasure that round you appear?
'Tis true, it is true—then let us not roam
From our dear smiling friends, and our dearly lov'd home:
Not the charms of a clime tho' so fragrant as this,
Would secure the lone exile such feelings of bliss.
ELLEN.

LINES.

Ah! there once was a time when midst pleasure I dwelt,
And the joys of affection and happiness felt;
When I rose with the lark was as blythe and as gay,
And welcomed with pleasure each glorious day,
When oft thro' the fields and the meadows I'd rove,
And list with delight to the soft cooing dove,
Or the lowing of herds as they grazed on the plain,
Whose sounds were re-echo'd again and again:
But now and reverse! the bright glorious day,
Annoyed by its charms fails to chase care away.
The notes of the robin which float on the breeze,
Combin'd with the lark's, have long ceas'd to please;
For oh! he is gone, who with me oft did share
Those glowing delights that dissipate care.
Oh! yes, he is gone—the blue curling wave
Does the body of Henry unconsciously lave:
He is gone—ah! too true! and left me alone
To wander the scenes where often he shone;
And as I dejectedly slowly walk there,
Present the sad image of meagre despair.
ELLAR.

STANZAS.

I long for a hermitage wild, and unknown
To the harpies that call themselves men;
But where the sweet robin might carol alone,
Or the fair faithful turtle-dove pensively moan,
And awaken the sighs of the glen.

O! such might I find where the forest-trees grow,
And border with beauty the glade;
Where the squirrel should nibble his home in the bough,
And the quick-footed rabbit should burrow below,
And bright streamlets run through the shade.

There passion should never embitter my hours,
But reason should lighten my cell;
And virtue, whose path is embroider'd with flowers,
With peace, her fair sister, should reign in the bowers,
And ever with me they should dwell.

As the calm-lighten'd clouds from the valley arise,
And role on the wings of the wind,
So my soul disencumber'd should look to the skies,
And anguish forever, should fly from my eyes,
And deception no refuge should find.

But the nut-cracking squirrel has chosen its mate,
And the robins tog their appear;
And affection soft whispers a thread of the state,
Where silence and solitude ever await,
And friendship can never repair.

Ah! were there a friend that would follow the heart,
And live in the light of the soul;
A friend whose behaviour, not cover'd by art,
Should be feeling and pure—real joy 'twould impart,
And the spirit should warm its control.

But man is the creature of pleasure and wealth,
Of swearing, and loud-roaring mirth;
And evening beholds him seek pleasure by stealth,
Regardless of character, kindred, or health—
A shame, a disgrace to the earth;

But others are kind in their way, and appear
To act with a view to your pleasure;
But ah! "they are hollow," and when they're most dear,
Most cheerful and tender, then most should we fear—
They smile at the prospect of treasure.

And some would be friendly, but oh! they suppose
That you must submit to their will;
Your judgment must bend to the thoughts they propose,
And when they have learned you their yea's and no's,
They think you can argue with skill.

Away with them all—for the man who is free,
Looks down on their pitiful lot—
Yea! rather the hermitage lonely give me,
Where the sweet-singing robin shall perch on the tree,
And happiness dwell in my cot.

Where the thoughts of my heart shall grow simple and pure,
And nature in innocence play—
Where my cares and desires shall still become fewer,
And where bright religion shall worship secure,
As I kneel by my altar to pray.

THE FUTURE.

In childhood's gay and thoughtless hour,
Which nought but dreams of bliss inspire,
Through bright anticipation's pow'r,
To future joys we most desire.

At last arrived at manhood's strength,
Tho' disappointment's sting we feel,
Why scorn we vainly to lament
When future hope some balm may yield

In wintry age with chilling cares,
With woes and sorrows quite oppress:
Why struggle we through life's dreary snares,
But for the future to be blest. OCTAVIAN.

A Highland Girl's address to her Lover.

Adieu! since thou art forc'd to roam
O'er ocean wild—afar from me,
Oh, think upon our Highland home,
Our native glen—where merrily
We oft in joyousness have rov'd,
And fondly—truly—dearly lov'd.

Where'er you go, still think on me,
For I must love thee, tho' we part,
Earl, prayer—each thought, shall be for thee—
Each throb of my adoring heart,
Will e'er be thine my Highland youth,
In lasting unabating truth.

My Love! they tell me where you go,
All that surrounds thee will be gay,
That Beauty there will brightly glow,
And pleasure sparkle in thy way,
And joy will e'er attend thine hours,
Thou'lt revel in her rosy bowers.

They tell me too, that all is bright
And pleasing to the youthful eye,
That all is happy—hearts are light,
And bosoms there ne'er heave a sigh—
Ah! no my Love! neath every rose,
A baneful adder doth repose.

Though pleasure, beauty, joy be near thee,
Thy heart will, to the Highland home,
Remain unbought, and I'll not fear thee,
Love once secur'd can never roam—
Then'lt not forget where'er you be,
The maid who roam'd with, sang for thee.

The rose tree, that you planted where
The little lake, before one cot
So calmly flows, in beauty there
Doth flourish in the peaceful spot
Which Love has hallow'd; which to me
Has ev'ry charm—it speaks of thee.

There oft I sing the well known lay,
In which thy voice has oft united,
That lovely, soothing, roundelay,
Which oft my aged sire delighted,
I sing now, while in his eye
A tear would start, and I would sigh.

His tear, my sigh would be for thee,
He loves thee truly, how I love
You know, then lost no doubt of me,
Wherever you may chance to rove—
Then'lt find no truer heart than mine,
'Tis solely, truly, ever thine.

What joy I look for, when mild spring
Again our rose tree will adorn,
Twill bring thee to me, then I'll sing
Gay as the Lark, when on the morn
He carols in the balmy air,
Adoring Nature, boundless fair.

Then fare-thee-well! Let beauty smile,
And pleasure spread her charms round thee,
I care not, for 'tis ill not beguile
Thy heart, thy faithful heart from me—
I know, that wherever'er you roam,
'Twill be in your own Highland home.
SELIM.

I love to climb the mountain's rocky side,
And from its summit view the scenes around;
To bend my wand'ring steps without a guide,
Through climes and regions yet by man unfound.

I love to contemplate the rugged sea,
When foaming surges lash the craggy shore;
Or, seated in my bark, I love to be,
Amidst the din and clangour of its war.

To trace the river to its sylvan source,
Through each wide pass, through ev'ry hollow glen,
In dreadful caverns to view its course,
Remote and distant from the haunts of men.

I love to ramble through the trackless wood,
Whose only music is the feather'd choir;
And in the shady grove, where none intrude,
Nor mortal step is heard, to tune my lyre.

There is a charm in Nature's wildest look,
Which Art with all its skill can never attain;
A charm romantic which has ever forsook
The proudest monuments and works of men.
ORASMYN.

Lines inscribed on a skull.

Gone are the airy tenants of these halls,
The loathsome worms creep thro' their moulding walls;
Gone are the golden visions of the mind,
The glowing thought, the sentiment refin'd;
Gone is the image, whose mysterious bright
Could clothe the form of horror with delight:
Gone—hurried, swifter than the lightning's robe,
Beyond the starry cincture of the globe.
Here laughing pleasure sweetly her purpling sail
To beauty's breath, and joy's inconstant gale;
Here glory rear'd her gilded tow'rs sublime;
Here genius prudence seam'd the map of time;
Here wav'd life's tree, whose verdant arms unfold
Their pendant globes of vegetable gold;
Here crossed streets in fancy's maze we find,
And here the splendid palace of the mind:
Here simple thoughts were kindled in the rays
Of reason bursting from religion's blaze;
But where are now these sparks of spirit? where
The airy populace that mingled here
Richer than Babel? Babel, where art thou,
Greater than Thebes,—where is Thebes' shrine now?

THE ADIEU.

Written on leaving a favourite place.

Adieu to the grove, to the hill and the plain,
Adieu, O, ye songsters, farewell to your strain;
Adieu to the meadow, the brook and the field,
Adieu to my walks when the evenings are mild.

The spring will return, the birds sweetly sing,
Those hills and those vales with their melody ring;
The tame robin-red-breast, the lark, and the thrush,
Will send their sweet music from every bush.

Their songs once were pleasing, now mournful to me,
They sing in the grove where I never may be;
They sing my adieu, and at each dying strain
They tell me I never may hear them again.

I walk'd by the side of a murmuring stream,
The waters rill'd sweetly—how pleasant they seem—
They once were delightful, no longer they sheer,
Alas! I must leave you—I give you a tear.

I go far away, but the fields still remain,
Perhaps I never shall see them again;
Their green turf's bosom another shall tread
When death's gloomy shadow encircles my head.
KEZIA.

The following lines were occasioned by the death of a young Lady, the survivor of two daughters—on whom, after her sister's decease, her parents' affections were united with increased fondness—but she died only a few months afterwards.

When sable darkness' shrouding gloom,
Veils sweet nature's smiling brow;
Lost is all her charming bloom,
No more the zephyr's gales perfume—
Sol smiles no more, but all is darkness now.

See! the livid lightnings glare!
Hark! the dest'ning thunder roars!
Hell-born night prevails—but lo!
Laughing Iris' radiant bow,
Heavenly peace to earth restores.

So when sorrow's storm prevails,
When affliction's clouds surround
Hope's horizon (pleasure's gale,
On its downy pinions rails,
For some heavenly Eden bound.

Lovely girl! where sorrow's storm,
Desolation's blast announced;
When thy seraph sister's form,
Each pulse with health and vigor warm,
Sunk as the vulture death upon his victim pounced.

In thee the rainbow's smiles were seen,
Its promises writ on thy brow,
Hope in their eye, with "brow serene"
Reflected stood—her heavenly mien
Promised a brighter sky—yet all is darkness now.

NIGHT.

On a calm summer eve, when the haze
Of Sol's declining beams were fading fast,
And cast a tinge of red upon the clouds
That seemed to hover round his broad expanse;
I left my hut, beneath a mountain side
To view the varied scenes, which Nature's hand
Diffuses lavishly through all creation.
At every step new scenes appear before me,
New beauties break upon my sight: each ridge
Reflects the dingy glare, and from the wave,
With lessen'd splendor, back the light recoils,
To trace its distant way, to worlds unknown.
Night's sable curtain creeps upon the void,
As slowly from the arch the rays recede,
Till but one little space is left, where all
A while remain, until they final sink,
And darkness undisputed reigns o'er heaven,
Silence and slumber o'er the world below.

THE SLAVE.

I ask'd a wretched negro why—
He sigh'd in sorrow deep,
And of the cause his ready eye,
So oft was seen to weep?

He said—'imagine you were borne
Across old ocean's wave,
And from your friends and kindred torn,
To be like me—a Slave?'

I ask'd him why he did not bend,
Nor at his lot complain;
Until a happier day should lend
The adamantine chain:

He cry'd, 'no day can end my doom,
Nor ease my bosom's strife;
Nought but the night within the tomb,
For I'm a slave for life.'

I told him he was happier far,
Than thousands here below;
Provided for, no cares could mar
His joys, or cause his woe:

'True, true,' he cry'd, as from his eye
The trickling tears flow'd free;
'But for my native shades I sigh,
And for blest Liberty.'

I left him, and could not restrain
The tumults of my heart;
And last I pow'r I'll break the chain,
And bid the slave depart:

O, you, who cannot for him feel,
But still his labour crave;
O, you, whose heart resemble steel,
Think but yourself a slave!

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

MATILDA.

A MORAL TALE.

Matilda Pembrook, was the orphan daughter of an eminent lord in the north of Ireland, and maternally allied to a family not less noble in blood, than in those virtues which digNify rank and add lustre to distinction of birth and titles of honor.

She lost both her parents at a very early age: and the care of her person as well as of her fortune, which was about fifteen thousand pounds, devolved on her grand mother; a venerable matron, whose unbounded affection and unremitting attention, left her darling ward little to regret in the loss of her relatives, who she was unable to recollect, and whose endearments could hardly have exceeded in tenderness those which she received from the most amiable and most affectionate of women.

Mrs. Pembrook had resided in the country, till her grand daughter arrived at the age when it was necessary she should acquire those accomplishments which are neither so easily nor so happily attained under private tuition, where there is no competition to inspire emulation, nor any expectation of praise to excite a laudable ambition to excel.

At this time Mrs. Pembrook removed with her lovely ward to the city of Armagh, where she could procure instructions in the polite arts of the fashionable world, not inferior to the best which could be obtained in the metropolis: and the good old lady enjoyed the satisfaction of watching the improvement of her grand-daughter, in a progress which kept pace with her warmest wishes and most sanguine expectations.

At eighteen, Matilda was equally celebrated for the elegance of her person, and the cultivation of her mind, in the endowment of which nature had been so liberal, that good sense, prudence, affability and politeness were appropriately native graces; and all the advantages she seemed to have derived from education, was its having called into action those perfections which would have otherwise been obscured by the artless innocence of uninformed and unconscious modesty.

At a ball, to which Mrs. Pembrook was a constant visitor, that her fair trust might be indulged in every proper amusement, and mingle with the high circle of life, in which her birth and fortune had placed her, she engaged the notice, and, as she was soon taught to believe, the affections of Mr. Howell, an officer in a regiment of dragoons, which was then quartered in the city. On the following day the young officer attended on Mrs. Pembrook, and supporting his pretensions by a candid account of his fortune and family, entreated her permission to pay his addresses to her grand-daughter. As no objections could be made, and as the propriety of his conduct recommended him in some degree, she made no scruple to comply with his request, and added to this indulgence assurances of her best offices in his favor.

Nor was his suit to the fair Matilda long preferred in vain. Mr. Howell possessed an agreeable person, and engaging manners: he had lived with the world, and was what is commonly called a polite and accomplished man: though his understanding was only of the middle rate, and his knowledge of that superficial kind which is acquired, without study, by a converse with the higher classes of mankind. As Matilda's heart was wholly unengaged, and Mr. Howell was the first who had seriously offered incense at the shrine of her beauty, she soon acknowledged a preference for him. Settlements were adjusted and an union immediately took place in which every circumstance concurred to promise complete and lasting felicity.

But the views of men are too often clouded by the mists of passion, prejudice and impetuosity: they extend not to the distant prospects of future events: too eager to hesitate: too opinionated to doubt, and too determined to be convinced, we rush blindly into precipices replete with danger: and urged on by the delusions of Hope, embrace the shadowy phantoms of untried expectations, which in the event, change their appearances, and exhibit the horrid spectacles of disappointment, dissatisfaction and disgust.

Such was the case with the unfortunate Mrs. Howell. The gay, the smiling, the obsequious lover, was soon metamorphosed into the insipid, the dull, the morose husband; and all her dreams of connubial happiness vanished with the unsubstantial pleasures of the nuptial pageantry.

Mr. Howell employed his first three months in arranging his establishment, and exhibiting his wife at public places: but the former was soon completed, and the latter became as quickly tiresome and disagreeable: and before six months were expired, one half of his time was engaged at the gaming table, and the other in the pursuit of pleasure equally injurious and disagreeable.

To add to the disquietude of the neglected Matilda, at that critical period, she had the misfortune to lose the representative of her parents, her kind and indulgent grand-mother, and the mortification to be refused the solicited company of Mr. Howell, in her journey to pay the last tribute of grateful affection to the honored protectress of her early years.

Nor did the wretched husband long maintain even the appearance of civility; every run of ill luck produced a chagrin, which was sure to vent itself upon his unfortunate wife; and every disappointment in his criminal pursuits, was the source of contempt and insult to the wretched partner of his bed.

As he never condescended to make her his confidante, she was a total stranger to the real state of his affairs, though she could not but remark the mouldering state of his circumstances: and as she succeeded to the effects of her grand-mother, which were by no means inconsiderable, she thought it prudent when she surrendered them to her husband to make a trifling reserve, as he was now so sparing of his purse to her, that she could hardly obtain enough from him to purchase little necessaries, which could not be comprised in those tradesmen's bills, the payment of which she saw daily protracted: and with a view to prevent the necessity of those applications to Mr. Howell, which always occasioned ill humor and frequently ill usage, she laid by three hundred pounds when she presented her husband with twice as many thousands.

After spending the night abroad Mr. Howell returned one morning at a time rather unusual, and found his wife at breakfast in her dressing room, into which he rudely entered, threw himself into a chair, and with wild and disordered looks, directed a servant to order a chaise for New Market.

Mrs. Howell, suspecting he labored under some pecuniary distress, arose from her seat, and approaching her husband in her way to the cabinet, where her three hundred pounds were deposited, she laid her hand on his, and kindly told him she was sorry to see him unhappy and flattered herself she could contribute to his relief.

Roused from a state of sullen stupidity by this tender application, he started from his chair, and with the most brutal rage made a blow at the devoted Matilda, with such violence and effect as nearly to lay her lifeless and bleeding at his feet—and leaving her in this wretched state, he rushed out of the house, informing the servant that opened the door for him that his mistress was ill and wanted the assistance of her maid.

As he believed he had dispatched the unfortunate Matilda, he thought it prudent to take shelter on the Continent, and embarked in a packet which he found just ready to sail for Ostend.

But the event proved less fatal than might have been expected—the blow which deprived her of her senses, occasioned no material injury, and the blood which had excited such terrors in her husband, had flowed only from her nose. She was soon recovered by the assiduity of her attendants, and shortly after heard of the sudden departure of her husband, under the impression of that fear which his guilt had naturally produced.

After this fresh proof that her life was in extreme danger, if she continued to live with a ruffian, devoid of even the common principles of humanity, and a stranger to those feelings which excite tenderness and respect for the female sex in the most savage nations of the world, she determined to retire from the house of her husband, and seek protection where she might avoid his further persecution by remaining unknown.

In consequence of these determinations, it was resolved, that the most likely way to elude the searches of her husband, and to provide that maintainance which her scanty provision, that she had laid by in reserve, could by no means furnish, would be to place herself as a companion to a lady in some respectable family in a situation in which she could not incur the smallest risk of discovery.

A few days afterwards she placed herself with the sisters of the earl of Dungannon, two amiable women, whose penetration soon discovered that there was some secret in the history of their new companion: a discovery which excited an additional degree of that tenderness to which their dispositions naturally inclined them—and with a delicacy peculiar to exalted minds, they strove by assiduities of kindness, to lessen the weight of misfortunes into which they did not think themselves at liberty to enquire.

Nor did the appearance of this beautiful stranger escape the notice of the earl of Dungannon. Disappointed by the authority of an inexorable parent in the gratification of his first passion, his heart had remained free from a second enthralment, and he had reached the age of thirty-two years, without having been prevailed on by the solicitations of his friends, to enter into engagements which might afford hopes of perpetuating a family, the honors of which would expire with himself. But the still lovely Matilda excited sensations in his mind to which he had long been a stranger; and the conversations he enjoyed at those meals of which the indulgent ladies had constantly compelled her to partake at their own tables, having assured him that he could find with her that happiness, the loss of which he had so long lamented, he meditated the means of discovering the real name and condition of the fair inmate, and determined, if it should turn out as he expected, to offer her his hand and his heart.

Meantime, Mrs. Howell was informed by her friends that her husband had returned to England as soon as he was assured of his safety; but had expressed much less concern at the flight of his wife, than at the other consequences: advantage of which had been taken by his creditors, whom he found in possession of his house and effects, but which proving insufficient to satisfy their demands, he was arrested by one of them for one hundred and fifty pounds and remained imprisoned for that sum.

On the receipt of this intelligence she hesitated not a moment to enclose in an anonomous letter written in a feigned hand, two-thirds of her little stock, earnestly exhorting him as a friend who did not chuse to disclose herself, to engage in some honorable employment, and to abandon those paths which led to certain destruction: but she had the mortification to learn that her advice proved unavailing, and that after his release from confinement, he had pursued the same line of conduct, till some disgraceful and dishonorable transaction had compelled him to disappear; and that for some time, his retreat had not been known even to his most particular friends.

Matters were in this situation when, on a journey from his castle in Dungannon to his villa in the neighborhood of the town, lord Dungannon's coach, which contained his sisters, Mrs. Howell and himself, was stopped by a single highwayman, during the absence of the only servant who attended it, and who had accidentally loitered behind the carriage; and the highwayman having presented his pistol to the bosom of one of the ladies, they were busily employed in collecting their money when Mrs. Howell gave a loud shriek and instantly fainted.

At this moment the servant alarmed at the shriek, hastened to get up with the carriage: which being observed by the robber, he withdrew his pistol from the coach, and discharged it unsuccessfully at the servant, who returned the fire and lodged the contents of his pistol into the body of the unfortunate plunderer.

During this transaction Mrs. Howell had remained in a state of insensibility, from which she recovered by the assiduities of lord Dungannon; but had no sooner opened her eyes than she turned them on the body of the highwayman, and having exclaimed, "my husband," she relapsed again into the state from which she had been summoned to inexpressible anguish.

It is impossible to describe the horror of the scene, or the consternation of the terrified ladies and their still more anxious brother. The first care of the latter was to get the body removed to the next village, which was effected by the arrival of an empty post chaise, which was on its return from the metropolis: the second and more important was the recovery of the widow; and in this too, he had the happiness to succeed, though he was obliged to suspend a curiosity which had been long excited.

At length the afflicted Matilda became more composed; and at the earnest request of the ladies, suggested by their impatient brother, entered into a detail of those circumstances which had produced such afflicting and alarming events: a recital which, whilst it excited the tenderest pity in the hearts of the amiable sisters, conveyed inexpressible satisfaction to their worthy brother, who now saw no impediment to the hopes he had long entertained that he might be at liberty to offer the participation of his honors and fortune to her who already possessed his heart.

Nor was the gentle Matilda insensible to the virtues and personal accomplishments of the generous Dungannon: with modest diffidence she vowed eternal obligation, and in the acknowledgments of her gratitude, betrayed the situation of her heart: a discovery of which her admirer did not fail to avail himself, in earnest solicitation to render his happiness complete, which she was easily prevailed on to promise: and as soon as decency would permit, she received the reward of her virtues in the hand of the truly noble Dungannon; a much more valuable gift than the honor and fortune with which it was accompanied.

Hence, let not the virtuous doubt but they are the peculiar care of that Being whose dispensations are always just, and who, even in this life, seldom fails to distinguish them by bestowing the choicest and most desirable blessings. Hence, let the vicious tremble; and whilst he beholds the unoffending victim of brutality prove the innocent instrument of punishment, let him learn that the laws he has transgressed are never to be violated with impunity, and that, however long he may escape receiving the reward of his crimes, the vengeance of Heaven will overtake him at last, and that too in a degree strictly proportioned to the nature and extent of his offence.
CHRUSANTHA.

SAGE PLANT.—The sage plant grows abundantly on the Island of Crete, and reaches the size of a small shrub. The leaves are collected annually by the Greeks, and dried to be used medicinally, as an infusion. They are very particular in the time and manner of collecting these leaves, being always gathered on the 1st of May, before sun-rise. The flavour and smell of the Greek plant is much more powerful than the common sage of our gardens.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

THE FATE OF GENIUS.

(By B. B. Swain, Esq. of N. J.)

"Even as the tenderness that hour inspires,
When summer's day declines along the hills,
So feels the fullness of the heart and eyes,
When all of genius, that can perish, dies."
Byron's Monody on Sheridan.

When the relentless hand of death deprives us forever of all that was dear and cherished; when the fell destroyer prostrates the lovely and loved, and life seems to have "no charm to wean us from the grave," we close the agony of grief in the secret recesses of our hearts, and in silence and solitude, mourn over our fallen hopes, and the perished dream that beguiled our early morning of existence. When the statesman, patriot, or warrior, descend alike to the lonely mansions of the tomb, the pomp of pageantry, all that can impress the beholder with a feeling of reverence for "the mighty dead," accompanies them, "a nation swells the funeral cry," and their names go down to posterity, adorned with all the blazonry and triumphs proud and a grateful country can bestow. But in the premature fate of exalted genius, in the sudden departure of all that was bright and noble in intellect, there is a mournful feeling, "a kindred sympathy with sins that yet," a something softer than sadness that pervades the heart, and impresses it more deeply with the uncertainty of life, and the instability of all human enjoyment. Genius has no country, its home is the world, all are alike ready to pay it homage, and thousands that would pass unnoticed the death of the patriot or sage of other climes, would feel it as a duty, as an impulse directed by the finer feelings of the heart, to bestow a sigh to the memory of departed genius.

There is something that appears fated to destroy early in life, the young and ardent mind; a consuming fire preys upon the spirit, a communing of deep thoughts wastes the frame, and the brighter the intellectual light burns within, the sooner the mortal thrall that binds the spirit, decays, and returns to its native dust. Some have, indeed, lingered out a life of want and indigence, like the immortal Sheridan, receiving the world's cold pity, while others like the unfortunate Chatterton have anticipated the approach of death, and sought in an early grave, that "dreamless sleep" which is the last refuge of blighted hopes, and fallen fortunes, from the storms and uncertainty of life.

Look on the youthful poet, with him the world is yet young, and all is dressed in joy and gladness—the elements he breathes, the flowers that bloom in their fragrance around him, all are a source of pleasure, pure, holy and unalloyed. He sees the world as men do a bright and beautiful picture: to him it is a scene of calm and unstained delight, for he is a stranger to its worthlessness, and has never wept over the desolation of the heart, or the delusive mockery that destroys the first energies of youthful existence—he gazes in silent adoration on the midnight moon, as she careers through the dark blue sky. He seeks the solitude of the lonely wood, and listens to the sighing of the breeze and murmur of the waters. He loves the nights for the world is quiet, and he is left alone with his own high thoughts. He stretches forth his hand, and the shadowy things of the invisible world are before him, the "firmless and the void." But, there is in his eye a bright and unearthly light; there is in his cheek a flush, but not of health: the spring comes in joy and gladness; the summer passes in glory and brightness, and his own loved autumn, with her melancholy, yet soft and pensive beauty lingers around him. The sky is bright over him, and the moon sheds again her silver light from the expanse of heaven. But he sees them not; ere the last leaf had fallen from the withered tree, the "dark angel" had his bow, and the grave closed over the victim of thought, and the martyr of sensibility forever.

Some have past away early, but in glory and triumph; their path was short but bright, and like the erratic comet left behind the remembrance of its splendor for mankind to pause and wonder at. They are among the lofty of earth, and "the loved of men." Their proudest mausoleum is a nation's gratitude—their highest eulogy a people's praise.

The shores of the Morea, will long resound to the name of our lamented Byron, and many a Grecian maiden weep in mournful tenderness over the early fate of him who poured his sweetest strains in praise of her native land, and whose last sigh was breathed in a prayer for its welfare. He died in the clime he loved, the classic soil of the buried brave, too soon indeed to witness its regenerated liberty, but yet, while all of his fame and glory was fresh upon him. As long as the memory of their Harmodius shall animate the bosom of the warrior Greek, as long as their land is remembered in story, or celebrated in song, the name of Byron will be connected with all that is ennobling in intellect, or elevated in the human character.

There is, while musing over the grave of genius, a holy feeling that pervades the heart, something that is allied to the softest and noblest portion of our nature. We revere the talents of the departed. We admire the mind of him who sleeps beneath the "storied urn," and we mourn over that mysterious decree of fate, which wills that the young and gifted, should pass away in the morning of life, and ere the high promise of their dawn was accomplished.

We must not close this brief and hasty article, without a passing notice, and a tribute of deep and unfeigned admiration, to the memory of another genius, who has paid within a few short months the last debt to nature. We allude to the recent melancholy death of the late Rev. Charles Maturin. Young, ardent, and possessed with the talents of the highest order, with a mind that looked beyond the narrow confines of the earth, and things forbidden to the view of common minds, few like him could lay bare the recesses of the human heart, exhibit to the sight its various changes, and excite in the bosoms of his readers, the mixed emotions of joy and sorrow, of terror and admiration. He was the Salvator of literature, struggling with penury unmerited, he still delighted the world with pictures, which, though sometimes wild and dark, were always magnificent, and gifted with that deep and mournful beauty, which is more touching to the feelings, and awakens more powerfully in the mind the thrill of interest. In his description of that passion which is the source of all our happiness or misery, "whose martyr is the broken heart," he was unrivalled, as all who have dwelt with delight upon the pages of "Montorio" and "Melmoth," or witnessed the powerful exhibition of his "Bertram," can bear ample testimony.

But he too has gone: the worthlessness of life, the tempest of the world, is no more to him; he has past "the first dark day of nothingness," and now calmly sleeps in the last resting place provided by the hands of pious friendship or affection.

And so it is: the young, the loved, the gay, the gifted, are doomed, as it were, among the first to depart, and happy are they who escape in the loneliness and silence of the tomb, the cold pity of heartless pride, and the grasp of unmerited oppression.

Yet the destiny of genius is a proud one; their names go down to posterity as the benefactors of mankind; they are wept over by the lovely and the young; they are mourned by the votaries of literature and science. The warrior may have a costly cenotaph erected to his memory, and is soon forgotten. But the names of departed genius are remembered to after ages. Their mortal part may moulder in the dust, but their spirit is abroad, and hovers around the scenes of its early inspiration. Their fame is connected with that of their country; the very soil upon which they trod is consecrated; and all that speaks, or breathes of them, awakens an emotion of deep and lasting interest.

"The meanest rill, the mightiest river,
Roll mingling with the s Ever forever."

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

PHARSELO.—A TALE.

I have met with persons who at the first glance appear to possess every requisite for making the perfect gentleman, but frequently on becoming more intimately acquainted with the characters of those very persons we find them "lost to the nobler sallies of the soul." Men whose degraded habits render them contemptible in the eyes of their acquaintances, and hateful to the world. Such a one was Pharselo. In his youth he became acquainted with a young lady of exquisite beauty and accomplishments. Pharselo immediately formed a design upon her heart, and accordingly continued his visits for some time, and at last succeeded in inspiring in her breast that feeling of love towards him which he declared he felt for her. This was the summit he wished to obtain, and Julia's father sanctioned the union. The day at length arrived which was to join the most perfidious of men to the loveliest of human beings. Arm in arm they proceeded to the chapel, and the ceremony was nearly completed when a woman rushed into the church, shrieking "My cruel husband!" and locking Pharselo in her arms, began upbraiding him for his perfidy. The lovely Julia was horror struck. Never before had I witnessed such a scene. Her vital powers were suspended, and she sunk exhausted and breathless on the floor. Assistance was immediately procured, but before any thing could be done her pure soul had taken its flight. How shall I describe the feelings of a fond father seeing all he held dear thus untimely taken from him, and all occasioned by the machinations of a villain. He drew a pocket and would have laid him dead at his feet had he not instantly made his escape. With the horrid laugh of a demon, and denouncing vengeance on his wife, he flew from the church. He afterwards became deranged, and died a poor unfriended maniac. E. C.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

By a Member of the Acting Committee of the Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement.

The Rivers of Pennsylvania.

The importance of her rivers, and their confluent streams, to the state of Pennsylvania, has not been hitherto, sufficiently known or appreciated. Extending through every part of her immense and fertile territory, and passing by or near the farm or dwelling of almost every one of her citizens, they have not been, as they ought ever to have been, regarded as the arteries by which vital prosperity can be conveyed to and from her capital, from every portion of the commonwealth; as the best and cheapest means of communication, if properly improved; and the improvement of which can be accomplished at, comparatively, a very inconsiderable cost.

Passing through rich and cultivated lands; washing boundless strata of mineral treasures; shaded by forests of the most valuable timber, the Alleghany, the Susquehannah, the Juniata, the Schuylkill, and the Delaware, have rolled along over their pebbly and rocky beds, without, until recently, any thing like an effort to make them, what the bounteous Creator of all things intended the industry and skill of man shall render them—free, safe, and cheap, and all-sufficient channels, to bear upon their bosoms the fruits of the toils of our honest husbandmen, the works of our skilful artists and mechanics, and the rich freights of our enterprizing merchants.

But the long neglect of the commonwealth, to these important interests has ceased. The day has dawned, and its meridian brightness is approaching, when our rivers will become sufficient objects of the bountiful and just care of our government; and when proper exertions will be made, to give them the full importance and value they must certainly have, when thus regarded.

Yet, although all admit the usefulness and interest of the rivers of our state, it may be advanced with safety, that all do not know the extent and amount of the advantages which may hereafter be derived from them; all have not contemplated the extent of the countries they water, the fertility of those countries, and the amount of the value of those productions, which their improvement will enable our citizens to convey upon them to a profitable market. It cannot, therefore, be an unwelcome effort, if an attempt be here made, to exhibit as briefly as possible, some of these facts, and we commence with the Alleghany, as it is least known in this part of the state.—It is intended without delay to examine and detail the peculiar character of each of the great rivers of Pennsylvania.

The Alleghany River.

This beautiful river, the whiteness and purity of whose waters are the admiration of all who have seen it, rising in Potter County, in Pennsylvania, and Cataragus in New York, fifty miles from the Pennsylvania line, passes down to Pittsburg, where, uniting with the Monongahela, it forms the majestic Ohio. It receives in its course the Conewango Creek, along which boats constantly navigate from Chataque Lake, in New York, the head of which is but eight miles from Lake Erie; the Tionesta Creek, navigable at some seasons with rafts, for upwards of fifty miles above its junction with the river, and which rises in Warren, M'Kean, Jefferson, and Venango Counties; French Creek, a stream which is navigable in the spring and autumn to Waterford, a distance of sixty miles from its junction with the Alleghany at Franklin, and which passes through the fertile counties of Erie, Crawford, and Venango; Scrub-grass Creek, which rises in Venango and Butler Counties; Toby's Creek, or Clarion River, which takes its rise in M'Kean County, and is almost united with some of the sources of the Susquehannah, and passes through Jefferson, Venango, and Armstrong; Sandy Lick and Mahoning Creek, the fountains of which are in M'Kean, Clearfield, and Indiana Counties and which fertilize in their way Jefferson and Armstrong; Kiskemanetas, a navigable stream, whose heads interlock with the west branch of the Susquehanna, the Juniata, and the Youghiogany; and whose banks abound with strong springs of salt water, upon which extensive manufactories of that article are established.

The Alleghany is always navigable, when the waters of the west are increased by the melting of the snows of the winter, from Hamilton, in New York, to Pittsburg, a distance of upwards of 270 miles. By a short portage between Chataque Lake and Portland on Erie, along the bed of the Conewango, to the Alleghany, at or near Warren, a communication may be formed with the lake, and already some of our enterprizing citizens have established a transportation company, by which they propose to supply the markets of the west with merchandize from New York; and to receive in return the productions of the industry and agriculture of those countries, and to send them to the market of New York.

Descending the Alleghany from the Pennsylvania line to Pittsburg are found the towns of Warren, the beauty of which, from its situation, is conceded by all; Franklin, at the mouth of French Creek, destined to become the Rochester of Pennsylvania; Lawrenceburg, seated like an eagle's nest in the hills opposite to the mouth of Clarion River; and Kittaning, a neat and prosperous town on the bank of the river, in the midst of a fine and improving country.

Ascending French Creek, thirty-five miles by water, we find the town of Meadville. It is situated on the left bank of the stream, and is one of the most flourishing villages in Pennsylvania. A large and elegant building has been erected for a College; and, with a fair portion of legislative patronage, which will not be denied to it, Meadville, at no distant day, will contain one of the most valuable seminaries of learning. The population of this town is particularly distinguished for industry and refinement. The manners of the inhabitants are polished, and in the private dwellings a neat and chaste style of architecture is particularly observable. A court house upon a plan liberally presented to the town by Mr. Strickland, is nearly completed; which will become a model for public buildings in western Pennsylvania.

French Creek is navigable at some seasons to Waterford, eighty-five miles (by water) from the river, and the distance from Waterford to Erie is but fifteen miles. It is well known that at Erie, the joint efforts of the governments of the United States and of Pennsylvania are directed to the improvement of the harbour; and there is every expectation that it will be made the best upon the lake.

Taken as in a state of nature, the Alleghany and its branches are the recipients of the northern part of the great western basin of Pennsylvania, and but little impeded by falls, though rapid as to current, from the declivity of their plane of motion.

Upon the banks of this river, and on those of its tributary streams, bituminous coal and rich iron ore, of every description, and limestone abound. Water power, to any extent, is found every where; and already capital and enterprise are extensively employed in the smelting and manufacturing of iron. On Oil Creek, on Scrub-grass Creek, on the river near Lawrenceburg, and in Armstrong county, near Kittaning, are already erected furnaces, which produce large quantities of the finest iron, at cheaper rates than it can be made in any other part of Pennsylvania, and which always finds an immediate and most profitable market at Pittsburg. Other works of this kind are projected, and with every prospect of successful execution.

The country through which the Alleghany and its branches pass, is peculiarly fertile and salubrious. The counties of Erie, Crawford, Venango, and Armstrong, contain as large, if not a larger proportion of cultivable land, than any other part of the state; and the New York market, by ascending the river, the Western and New Orleans markets, by descending the Ohio, are open at the election of the inhabitants of those counties. Upon the Connemaugh, the parent stream of the Kiskemanetas, and along the sides of the Alleghany river, rich salt springs are every where found; and it is but a small estimate of the capacity of the salt works there established, to state that they can produce two hundred thousand barrels, or one million of bushels of salt per annum. The salt is of excellent quality and is vended at from 12½ to 20 cents per bushel where manufactured.

The lands, which are within the basin of the Alleghany, amount to 6,267,400 acres.

But the capacity of the Alleghany for improvement is greater than that of any other river in Pennsylvania. It has no precipitous falls—it has no large or rugged rocks, to render its navigation dangerous, and which would create difficulties in clearing its bed. It has, at all times, a sufficient quantity of water, which, if thrown together by dams, would furnish deep and not rapid channels: materials for its improvement abound every where. These circumstances, together with the number of its deep and extensive pools, will render the cost of the work which would make a steam boat navigation on the Alleghany to Warren, very inconsiderable. Part of the river has been examined by the Engineers of the United States; and it will be hazarding nothing to say, this work, under the charge of judicious and competent persons, would not cost beyond the sum of four hundred thousand dollars. Thus a complete navigation for steam boats, having always from eighteen to twenty four inches of water, in channels of forty feet wide; and upon which the boats may ascend at the average rate of four miles an hour, and descend at the rate of eight miles, may be completed for the distance of two hundred and twenty miles, affording to the inhabitants of nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-two square miles, and six millions two hundred and sixty-seven acres, the cheapest approach to market that can be made.—For two thousand dollars per mile all this can be accomplished on the Alleghany river; and when this work shall be executed, one hundred and forty miles of the only Pennsylvania line of communication between the Ohio and Lake Erie from Pittsburg to the mouth of French Creek, will be completed.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Advices received at New-York contain some particulars of recent transactions at the Brazils—the dates from Rio are up to the 30th Nov. "It is currently reported that the Brazilian Government (in consequence of despatches received by the Brazilian brig of war Cabocle, arrived last evening from Montevideo) is going to declare war immediately against Buenos Ayres; and that captain Taylor will be appointed to command the squadron at River la Plata. Several vessels lately arrived have been robbed by privateers about the line; one of them, a slave ship, had her cargo (250 slaves) taken out of her. —Several transports, with 2000 troops, sailed for Montevide, 15 days since, under convoy of a frigate and 2 sloops of war. The decisive victory gained by the Patriots over the Brazilian troops on the 12th Oct. has had a tendency to destroy all confidence which the latter reposed in their military discipline, better equipments, &c. The loss on the Brazilian side was 400 killed, 470 privates, and 32 officers prisoners; a large number of small arms, military stores, &c. The Brazilian 64, Com. Jewett, had just arrived from Bahia.

Sir Charles Stuart left Rio recently for Bahia in the Diamond frigate, and it was said would return here."

A letter from an American gentleman at Buenos Ayres, in speaking of the late victory gained by the Patriots of the Banda Oriental, over the Brazilian troops, thus describes the manner in which the battle was fought:—

"The two armies met on a plain called Sarandy, a place very favourable to cavalry, of which both parties were composed. The people of this country always fight on horseback, armed with a carbine and broad sword. Before the battle Lavalleja made a short address to his friends, as he called them, and then gave the necessary orders, the most important of which was, that they were to use nothing but the sabre—their carbines were fastened at their backs in such a manner as to afford some protection to the back and neck. The Brazilians advanced in a canter, while the Patriots commenced at a trot. When within sixty yards of each other, the Patriots broke into a brisk gallop, and as they closed quickened their pace. The Brazilians continued advancing in a canter till within twenty yards, when they fired, but before they could throw their carbines over their shoulders and draw their swords, the Patriots, at full speed, where upon them, sword in hand. After a conflict of about twenty minutes, the Brazilians, unable to sustain the shock, gave way at every point."

In the first constituent assembly of Guatemala, in 1823, three Indian deputies took their seats, of whom two were ecclesiastics. An Indian was also elected senator. The tribes of Indians in that republic form more than half the population. By the constitution, they are placed on an equality with the descendants of the Spaniards.

"One million of dollars shall be placed at the disposition of the Liberator, for distribution among the united liberating army that conquered at Junin and Ayacucho."

Extract of a letter from New-Orleans, dated Dec. 20, 1825

"The city of New-Orleans is very mean in appearance. The houses are principally one story high, and built after the French or Spanish fashion. Nearly one third of the houses appear to be tipping shops, and it is the most dissipated place I ever beheld. I have counted twelve thousand dollars, in one room, in a gambling house, and have seen persons lose and win five hundred dollars in the course of a few minutes. Sunday is the most public day we have here. Troops parading, and all the stores open. Catholics are performing service in the church, and at the same time a troop of Creoles are playing in the public square, immediately in front, while in the rear lies another public square, where the slaves are dancing congo. About six or seven miles below the city lies the battle ground, near the banks of the Mississippi. The remains of the fortifications are still to be seen, and heaps of earth mark the spots where the slain were interred; four large oaks standing near each other, and forming a square, mark the spot where General Jackson and Packenham had an interview a few hours previous to the battle. About 150 yards from the oaks stand a pine where the remains of Gen. Packenham were interred."

BALLOON ASCENT FROM PLYMOUTH.

Mrs. Graham has published the following account of the ascent:—"On rising from the market, we observed all the eminences in the vicinity covered with a dense mass of spectators, who, on perceiving the balloon in the air, raised a tremendous shout. The finest object that attracted our attention was the dock yard, which, together with the river Tamar, was truly grand and imposing—but finding we must inevitably descend in the sea, we had no time to take a minute survey of the delightful scenery below us. We were very soon over the Sound, at which time Mr. Graham was employed in keeping the valve open to allow the discharge of gas, to effect a speedy descent—but the balloon containing nearly sufficient for three persons, this desired event was protracted much longer than otherwise would have been the case. I at this time put on a cork waistcoat, and at my earnest request Mr. Graham allowed me to tie a copper life preserver round his waist. We observed several boats in the Sound, but not more than two or three outside the Breakwater, and plainly saw a vessel, which afterwards proved to be the Harpy revenue cutter, sailing outwards with great rapidity. We soon passed over her, and distinctly heard the firing of a musket three times, but could not perceive the royal marine boat, from whence the firing proceeded. Our descent now became so rapid, that the rush of air upwards was tremendous, and the noise of the waves seemed to be all around us. Being in the lower current of air, we drifted a considerable distance during the last two or three minutes; and when at last we reached the water, we were instantly immersed to a great depth, and directly rising, drifted along, the balloon on its side, and the car completely under water, on its side also, every wave passing over our heads. In this manner, after commending ourselves to the protecting hand of Providence, we continued nearly half an hour, when the Royal Marine boat, commanded by Sergeant White, arrived to our assistance, being the only vessel that could possibly have reached us in time to have preserved our lives. After getting us into the boat, the crew used every exertion to save the balloon—but it was found to be utterly impossible, and Mr. Graham requested them instantly to cut it away, and not endanger the whole of our lives in fruitless endeavours to save the property—this was immediately done, and the balloon and car re-ascended rapidly. We were shortly afterwards taken on board the Harpy, commanded by Lieut. M'Donald, where we experienced every attention and comfort from him and his steward, who, next to Sergeant White and his perseverng men, deserve our warmest gratitude. Whilst we remained here, Sergeant White sent on shore for a suit of clothes for me, and after partaking of the hospitality of Lieut. M'Donald, we again entered the Royal Marine boat, and once more reached Stonehouse, after experiencing the wonderful protection of the only Being who could stretch out a saving arm in our perilous situation.

"M. GRAHAM."

The Water borers near Baltimore, have reached a depth of 196 feet and are now working in a rock. The water has risen 176 feet, and is within 20 feet of the surface of the earth.

The Legislature of Maryland on Tuesday last, elected Col. E. F. Chambers, to fill the vacancy occasioned in the Senate of the U. States by the resignation of Edward Lloyd, Esq. by a vote of 59 to 54. General Reid was the opposing candidate.

A gentleman of Baltimore has constructed a mud machine, for the purpose of cleaning the channels of rivers. It is calculated either for horse or steam power, and is spoken of in favorable terms by those who have examined it.

We regret to learn that the house of Mr. Brooks, Editor of the Salem (N. J.) Messenger, was on Monday evening last, considerably injured by fire, which was caused by the blaze of a candle coming in contact with the curtains of the bed.

A Schoolmaster, named Blake, of Salisbury, Vt. in attempting to chastise a scholar for misconduct, was resisted by an elder brother of the lad named Howard, aged 18. In a contest that ensued, the latter was killed by an accidental blow from Mr. Blake, who has given himself up for trial.

Loadstone, in great abundance, is said to have been discovered in Rockingham County, N. C. The discovery smacks of Swedenborg—a ploughman had his ploughshare disengaged from its place and it was found strongly attached to the loadstone.

The subject of the Mission to Panama has not yet been decided upon in the Senate. It is said that it meets with serious opposition in that body.

The Charleston Courier of the 17th inst. states that two attempts were made to fire that city on the previous night. Great excitement and alarm prevailed in consequence.

The Montreal Herald, of the 18th instant, mentions that a party of Americans from Vermont, came into the province of Upper Canada a few days previous in a riotous manner, and attempted to kidnap and convey a man from a house at St. Armand's to the United States. Three of them were taken and confined in jail.

When Com. Rodgers was at Patras, seven Turkish widows, whose husbands had been killed at Corinth, were brought on board the North Carolina by the Greeks for sale. The Commodore generously paid their ransom, gave them their liberty, and sent them to Smyrna.

Last Monday night, a most daring attempt at house breaking was made upon a dwelling in Fifth, between Spruce and Pine streets: the villains entered the yard, over a high fence, and had succeeded breaking open the kitchen window when alarmed by the screams of a black woman, who had fallen asleep by the fire. So great was the consternation of the guilty wretches, that in their hurry to escape, they left behind them a screw-augur, and a pistol loaded with buck shot, on the handle of the pistol were burned the letters I. H.

The first printer who settled in Pennsylvania was William Bradford, a native of Leicester, in England, and a member of the society of Friends, who emigrated in 1682 or '3, and landed on the spot where Philadelphia was soon after laid out, before a house was built. It is believed that he set up his first printing press at Kensington, in the neighborhood of the Treaty Tree. His earliest publication was an almanac, of which, as it is the most ancient book printed in Pennsylvania, the title page may be worth copying:

"An Almanac for the year of the Christian account, 1687, particularly respecting the Meridian and Latitude of Burlington, but may indifferently serve all places adjacent. By Daniel Leeds, Student in Agriculture. Printed and sold by William Bradford, near Philadelphia, in Pennsylvania, Pro Anno, 1687."

There are now two lines of stages, which run daily from Erie, Pa. to Buffalo, N. Y. a distance of 90 miles, along the shores of the Lake; and after the 1st of April, it is the intention of Messrs. M'Gill & Co. to extend their line daily from Erie to Pittsburg, a distance of 130 miles, which will make an uninterrupted communication from this city, through the north western portion of our own state, along the head of New York, and down the Canals to the Commercial Emporium.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock on Saturday morning last, an explosion took place at Eden Park Powder Mills, belonging to J. P. Garesche, Esq. situated on the south side of the Christiana river, about a mile from Wilmington, Del. Just before the explosion, a black man who worked in the mills, set a tin vessel, containing oil used for greasing the gudgeons, on some coals which he drew from the furnace outside the building, and in about a minute from the time that he was seen to enter the house which blew up, the explosion took place. From this and other circumstances, there is no doubt that the accident was caused by some fire which had adhered to the bottom of the oil can, or lodged in his clothes.—The negro and four horses were killed, and from 2500 to 3000 pounds of powder destroyed.

At the late session of the legislature of the state of Tennessee, an act was passed for allowing any person to enter any vacant and unappropriated land lying east of the Congressional Reservation Line, and north of Tennessee river, by paying one cent per acre for every acre: Provided, that no person shall enter more than six hundred acres, nor less than twenty five. There is in that part of the state a great quantity of vacant land, some of it adapted to cultivation, and the timber of other portions of it being valuable. This presents a fine opening for emigrants, who are not afraid of hard work and spare living for a time.

Mr. White, the able Engineer of the incorporated company for watering the City of New York, has made a detailed report on that subject, in which he maintains the practicability of the plan, and estimates the cost at $1,500,000, and the time required for the completion of the work, at about three years. It is proposed to convey the water thirteen miles in a brick tunnel, and nine more in iron pipes of 24 inches in diameter. The quantity of water which can thus be conveyed to the City is calculated to be sufficient for a population of 400,000, allowing an average of 20 gallons per diem for each individual.

A southern judge some years ago, in his charge to a grand jury, denounced duelling in terms so severe, that they presented two men, one for giving and the other for receiving a challenge. The magistrate caused both of the parties to be arrested, and enforced the law so rigidly that both parties, after the rising of the court, challenged him. To round the circle of absurdity, the judge accepted the challenge, fought and wounded them both.

The receipts into the Treasury of New-York during the year ending 30th November last, (including $181,445,47 in the Treasury on the 30th November, 1824,) amounted to $1,824,186,80. Payments during the year, $1,645,790,20. Balance in the Treasury, $248,450,60. Of the receipts the following were the principal items:—Canal Tolls, $521,543,94; Salt Springs, 79,067; Auction duty, 286,952,38; State Tax, 166,449,58; Lotteries, $20,000; Taxes on incorporated companies, 18,242,89.

It appears from a statement of the valuation of real and personal estate in the several counties of the state of New York, for the year 1825, received at the office of the Comptroller of that state, that New York is set down at one hundred and one million, one hundred and sixty thousand and forty six dollars. Albany county, the seat of government, stands next highest in point of value, and is put down at ten million, two hundred sixty one thousand, eight hundred and fifteen dollars.

A society is about to be formed in Portage county, Ohio, to be called the Auxiliary Owen Society of Portage county. It is to be governed by a President, a general committee of 12 members, and treasurer, to be chosen annually by ballot each member having one vote. Liberty of conscience and the free exercise of religion are secured to all.

By a report made by the Committee of Ways and Means of the Delaware Legislature, it appears that the whole of the estimated means of the state, for the current year, are 25,579 dollars 92½ cents; and the aggregate expenses for the same period are estimated at 20,284 dollars leaving a balance to be disposed of as the Legislature may direct, of 5,294 dollars 92½ cents.

A number of the most respectable mercantile houses of New York have entered into a mutual pledge that, for debts contracted after the date of their agreement (Dec. 22d, 1825,) they will, in no instance, discharge any debtor, who, in case of insolvency, shall in any manner make a preference in paying or securing any creditor whatever, except for money actually borrowed, for accommodation-notes discounted at some bank, and for Custom House bonds.

At a Court of Over and Terminer, recently held in the County of Oswego, (N. Y.) Willard Coons, an opulent and hitherto respectable farmer, of the town of Mexico, was convicted of aiding and assisting John Howard, his brother-in-law, who stood indicted for the crime of forgery, to escape from the county gaol, and was sentenced to the state prison for six years.

Sir David Ochterlony, whose decease has been lately mentioned in the papers, is said to have been one of the most popular British Generals ever in India. He was, like Admiral Coffin, a native of Boston, and a graduate from our free schools. Several persons are now living who were his school fellows. He rose in the world by his talents and by those excellent habits which have been, and we hope ever will continue to be the characteristics of the youth of this country—and which are better to them than the inheritance of an estate.

A committee on the part of the Legislature of Maryland, appointed to confer with the Legislature of Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, upon the subject of negro runaways, has arrived at Dover. It is stated that after a conference with the Delaware Legislature, a bill has been introduced into that body, which goes to enforce the laws of that State and the United States, by penal regulations.

Mr. Gardner, elected a second time to represent Greene county, Ohio, in the house of representatives of that state, has been again declared to be disqualified for a seat in that house—having violated the constitution of the state, in procuring his first election by offering a bribe, and thereby rendering himself incapable of serving as a representative in the legislature for two years.

A letter to Col. A. Whann, was received a few days since, says the Elkton Press, dated "Evesham, Burlington county, N. J. Jan. 17," from the Post Master there, by which it appears "there is a person residing in that county, strongly suspected of being the murderer of Miss Cunningham, who calls himself Henry More. He is a stout, coarse, ill-looking fellow, about 21 or 22 years of age, 6 feet high, and by trade a shoemaker. He says that he came from Maryland, and appears to have some knowledge of Elkton; that he crossed the ferry at Havre-de-Grace about the time the murder was committed. He came to that county in the beginning of May last, and has been in the neighbourhood, (an obscure neck of land between two rivers, and several miles from any public road) ever since. What gave rise to suspicion against him was the uneasiness he manifested after an account of the murder arrived there; his expressions and exclamations, both when awake and asleep, caused the family with whom he lived, to question him concerning the murder, and he told them he knew the man that committed the murder.—He built a cabin in the woods and lived in it a short time, but he returned and said he had no peace there. He still remains in the neighborhood, although he knows people suspected him."

SENSATIONS.—In the course of one of Mr. Abernethy's lectures, at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, he took occasion to exemplify the doctrine of the sensations not residing in the part where they were supposed to be felt, but in the brain itself: and instanced the case of a man who fancied he felt an itching in his ancle, and actually scratched the extremity of his wooden leg, to appease the supposed irritation. It is on the same principle that when patients limbs undergo amputation, they often fancy they feel sensations in their toes and fingers, although those parts are removed. So great is the delusion at times, that they are not satisfied the limb is off, until they have ocular proof given them by the removal of the bandage from their eyes.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Messrs Editors—In perusing your paper of the 21st instant, my attention was attracted by a communication signed J. R. W. relative to the debating societies. I can inform your correspondent that the Forensic and Literary Circle, a debating society, holds its meetings after 7 o'clock, on every Friday evening, in the County Court House, corner of Sixth and Chesnut street, where persons desirous of becoming acquainted with its proceedings may attend. The object of this institution is well established, from the public anniversary orations delivered in the city, and from other cause. I would, nevertheless, state that any question, either historical, political, philosophical, or literary, &c. (theological subjects excepted) is chosen at a meeting prior to that on which it is to be discussed, in order that members may have sufficient time to view it in its various ramifications, except once in every month when there is an extemporaneous debate. Independent of this arrangement, however, quarterly addresses are delivered before the society by such members as may be elected for the purpose. This, we think, is highly calculated to develope the powers of the speakers, as well as conducive to habits of accuracy. Morality and respectability are the only tests to membership, until the constitutional number is filled up. Members are by no means obliged to take part in debate, that being a matter wholly optional. Questions are always decided upon the force of argument, as a stimulus to the speakers. A communication box is also placed in the room for the reception of articles of composition from the members, which are read before the society at the first meeting in every month.

VERITAS.

OSSIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE SUN.

"Where dost thou sit above, round as the shield of my fathers? Whence are thy beams, O Sun! thou comest forth in thy awful beauty; the stars hide themselves in the sky, the moon, cold, and pale, sinks in the western wave.—But thou thyself movest alone; who can be a companion of thy course? The oaks of the mountain fall; the mountains themselves decay with years; the ocean sinks and grows again. The moon herself is lost in heaven; but thou art forever the same, rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests, when thunder rolls and lightning flies, thou lookest in thy beauty from the clouds, and laughest at the storm.

But to Ossian thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair flows on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art, perhaps, like me, for a season; thy years will have an end. Thou shalt sleep in the clouds careless of the voice of the morning.—Exult then, O sun, in the strength of thy youth. Age is dark and unlovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it shines through broken clouds, and the mist is on the hills: the blast of the north is on the plain, the traveller shrinks in the midst of his journey.

Green Room Intelligence.

From the nature of Kean's previous arrangements, it is announced that it will be impossible for him to extend his present engagement here over Wednesday night of next week.—On Monday evening last he performed Lear—Wednesday night, Sir Giles Overreach—Thursday, he repeated Othello—Friday, Sir Edward Mortimer, and this evening he takes the part of Reuben Glenroy, by particular request. The houses have been well filled, although there were at either time, few ladies present. The performances this week, have been uninterrupted, and perfectly satisfactory throughout.

Miss Kelly, of whom the New-Yorkers have cost so much that it is enough now merely to mention her name to excite the attention of all lovers of melody and song, is looked for to be here in a few days, when we may expect to see the front boxes of the theatre, which of late have been usurped by the men, filled with the beauty and fashion of the city.

The celebrated Greek Ringas, who has exhibited his ingenious and surprising tricks for several months, with great success, at the La Fayette Amphitheatre, New York, has arrived in this city, and has taken the room at the Masonic Hall, in which he has commenced displaying his unrivalled art to our citizens.

At the La Fayette Theatre in New York, they have a curious Automaton Trumpeter—a machine in the shape and about the size of a man, which plays divers tunes upon the trumpet, with great exactness, and marches with a proper respect to time. It is the work of Professor Robinson, of Paris, and is exhibited under the direction of his son, the gentleman who some time since made an ascent in a balloon.

The managers of the Albany theatre have introduced a new arrangement in the economy of their establishment, by permitting spectators to enter at half price from 9 o'clock. Mr. Cooper is expected to commence an engagement there shortly.

Charles Gilfert has applied to the N. York legislature for an act of incorporation to erect an opera house in New York city.

Mr. Hamblin concluded his engagement in Boston on Friday week.

Miss Riddle has returned to Chatham Garden Theatre, from Montreal. She has added to the just reputation acquired during her first engagement there.

At Montreal, the talents of Mrs. Barnes have attracted full houses. She appeared on the 9th inst. in the character of Isabella, of which the Montreal papers speak in the highest terms.

Utica contains both a Theatre and a Circus. At the former, Mr. Maywood concluded his engagement on the 13th inst. but generously volunteered to play Richard III. on the following evening for the benefit of Mr. Williams. After the play, being called for, he came forward and delivered a neat and appropriate speech.

A Circus was opened at Norfolk, Va. on the 20th inst. Several performers from New York, Boston, Albany, and elsewhere, of considerable merit, are engaged, and a large share of patronage is expected.

On the 30th ult. the tragedy of Richard III. was performed at the theatre in Mobile, Alab.—the crook'd back'd tyrant was represented by a Mr. Wilton, "from the Northern theatres."—This star, while in our latitudes, was not very luminous, or else his brilliancy was eclipsed by the numerous comets which have appeared among us, for we do not recollect of seeing or hearing of his appearance in this quarter before.

The comedy of Quite Correct and the farce of Paul Pry were the concluding performances at the London Haymarket theatre last season, which was crammed on the occasion. When the farce was over, Mr. Liston came forward as Paul Pry, and addressed the audience in a speech, of which the following is a brief summary: "Ladies and gentlemen, the managers have appointed me their spokesman on this occasion, and really between you and I, for it shall go no further, they have acted very wrong, because I am not in the habit of speaking in public. Laughter and applause. Now seven months is a long season, summer season I mean, unless we mean the winter to last till July. During this period they have brought out several new pieces which have had a great run; no, I mean a tolerable great run; and I think, between you and I, for I make it a point never to pry into any body's affairs but my own, that they will be able to make both ends meet. The performers also return you their sincere thanks, and between you and I, I think they ought to do so, for your patronage. I, myself, as one of them, thank you with all my heart, and take my leave of you pro tempore only, and as you have been liberal in your patronage this season, which was, speaking freely between ourselves, very kind of you, so may we hope for a continuance of it next season. Great applause and laughter, in the midst of which, Mr. Liston, after bowing repeatedly, retired, but soon returned. I beg your pardon, but I hope I don't intrude; I just dropped in to get my umbrella, which I left in the corner, and which if I do not get now, I shall be obliged to go without till next April, which is a long time you'll allow."—This strange speech closed the evening's and the season's entertainment.

The Drury Lane management have found it necessary to depart from the announced intention not to pay more than twenty pounds a week to any actor or actress; Mr. Liston is to receive fifteen pounds per night for four nights of each week, being three times the amount of the highest weekly salary ever paid to John Kemble. The engagement with Mr. Liston was concluded by Mr. Calcraft, on behalf of the committee, who saw with alarm the deserted appearance which the theatre presented every night; an appearance not very difficult to account for, when it shall be recollected that of the company which Drury possessed two years ago, the following members had withdrawn, viz: Braham, Munden, Liston, Kean, Macready, Miss Stephens, Madame Vestris, and Elliston absent from indisposition.

Kelley in his Reminiscences has the following paragraph: "The car, in which were Sylvia and Cymon, were drawn by two beautiful horses, and at my feet, as Cymon, lay a beautiful cupid. Before the piece was brought out, I had a number of children brought to me, that I might choose a cupid. One struck me, with a fine pair of black eyes, who seemed by his looks and little gestures to be most anxious to be chosen as the representative of the God of Love: I chose him, and little then did I imagine that my little cupid would eventually become a great actor; the little urchin was neather more nor less than Edmund Kean. He has often told me that he ever after this period felt a regard for me, from the circumstance of my having preferred him to the other children. I consider my having been the means of introducing this great genius to the stage one of my most pleasurable recollections."

Evening Post.

PHILADELPHIA.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1826.

TO READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS.

"Francis," oh! have you come at last? you have been much enquired for of late; you are welcome sir. "Rosa"—"Oliveira"—"Jernus"—"D. W."—"Ephraim Doubtful, to Edwin"—"Curious Epitaphs"—"The Communication of Cyprian," and a variety of Enigmas, Conundrums, &c. are filed for insertion.

"Lilla" need be under no apprehensions either of being "thrown by in silence," or "commented upon in notes to correspondents;" we have it not in our nature to treat with rudeness so fair and delicate a flower, but would rather with much kindness place it where it shall not "waste its sweetness on the desert air," but dispense around the delight it was formed to impart.

Cyprian is informed that a letter box for the convenience of correspondents has long been placed at the gate leading to the office.

"Julia Dudley" bears every mark of "a first attempt" and must be thrown by; as the author wishes for the reason "why he should be so hardly dealt with," he shall be gratified in the future notes to "correspondents." "A Stranger and Wonderful Prophet," &c. from a subscriber, has long since been published in this paper.

The valuable MS of a friend who proposes to favour our readers with a series of essays on the present state of society, &c. in our city, has unfortunately been mislaid, and cannot be found; should it not be too much trouble, we should like to receive another copy, which we promise him shall meet with an immediate insertion.

From our friend, the "Milford Bard," we have received a variety of poetical effusions, and several essays, one of which, "The Pursuit of Happiness" shall appear forthwith.—His writings evince much talent, and an originality, which with proper cultivation, may render his name conspicuous among those who are "toiling up the hill of fame."—He will accept our thanks for "The Flight of Fancy," "The Grandeur of Heaven," "The Bandit's Cave," "Charms of the Fair," "Blighted Joys," a "Song," &c.

We publish this week an interesting article on the rivers of Pennsylvania, which will claim attention—the subject with which it is connected is one which may now be said to have obtained entire possession of the public mind, and a spirit of enterprise seems awakened, from which we argue the most happy consequences, both to this city and the state at large.

The utility of the proposed breakwater at the mouth of the Delaware, was forcibly demonstrated in the recent exposure of the Manchester and Tuscarora, from Liverpool; the former of which, having on board upwards of forty passengers, after having reached the point where the breakwater is to be located, was driven again to sea, from the inability of maintaining her position. She subsequently came in, and is now at anchor below, and the Tuscarora has come up. Had the weather been as bad as might reasonably have been expected, at this season of the year, the consequences to both of those valuable vessels would have been appalling. Such facts should plead powerfully in behalf of the measure, and it cannot be possible that, aided as they are by numerous other reasons of justice and propriety, the subject will be longer delayed.

NEW THEORY.

"Who knows but venturous man in time may go
Through Etna's hoary womb, where flames eternal glow."

Extract of a letter, dated Harrisburg, Jan. 21, 1826.—"I have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Reynolds deliver four lectures in this place, on Captain Symmes' theory of the earth, and I can say with truth, that I have seldom spent as many evenings to my entire satisfaction. Instead of being carried away after the idle vagaries of an enthusiastic visionary, the mind is captivated by Mr. R. by a plain unvarnished, but exceedingly interesting discourse—nor is it permitted to stumble over a single difficulty, until it is fairly landed in the centre of "mother earth." Every step of the progress to the "verge" appears to be a solid foothold, founded on historical facts, to which every reader may have access; and beyond the "verge," Mr. R. leads his audience, by as conclusive analogical reasoning as that species of argument seems capable of. Indeed, every person with whom I have conversed, members of the legislature, as well as citizens of this town, are much interested with the novelty of the subject, and charmed with Mr. Reynolds' method of treating it. The lovers of philosophy, astronomy, geography and history, as well as the votaries of amusement—ladies as well as gentlemen—are all captivated with this phenomenon of the west. I understand that Mr. Reynolds is to leave this place for your city to-morrow. I hope he may receive the attention which it is my opinion his subject merits, and a portion of the politeness for which your city is proverbial. I assure you that the young and the gay will receive much instruction and amusement by attending his lectures, while the grave and the learned will have their faith in a solid world shaken to the centre."

Sundry very important propositions are now before Congress, says the Baltimore American, amongst which may be found one to amend the constitution, and to give to the people, in their individual capacity, the choice of their First Magistrate.—Another proposition is to establish a Naval Academy for the instruction of American seamen. Another is a proposal to authorise the government to subscribe to such plans of internal improvement as may be projected by chartered companies in the different states, which may receive the sanction of Congress, and to set apart a distinct fund for that purpose. We barely enumerate these few amongst many other interesting subjects that are now pressing on the attention of Congress, because they were brought forward on the same day. The fact is that the spirit of improvement moves onward with so much rapidity, that no alternative is left to our national legislature but to follow her footsteps. The members may hesitate and ponder, and talk gravely about the constitutionality of all endeavors to make our country more respected, powerful, prosperous and happy—they may even find out that the words internal improvement are not mentioned in the constitution once, and denounce all such attempts as unconstitutional on that account, if they please; but our countrymen are determined to have these internal improvements, and they will as soon be made to believe that it is as unconstitutional for a river to flow in its natural channel as into an artificial one. For aught we see, one of these grave expounders of national law might, by the same train of argument, prove the unconstitutionality of the Niagara cataract.

The Managers of the Northern Dispensary, in their annual report for the last year, after acknowledging with gratitude the liberality of several of their fellow citizens, by whose generous contributions they have been enabled to discharge all their debts, and to meet all their expenses, express a hope, in which we have no doubt they will be gratified, if their exertions to merit the good will of the philanthropic and benevolent among us are continued with the same laudable and praiseworthy zeal as heretofore, that the benefactions will continue to accumulate until this important and interesting charity is fixed upon a substantial and permanent basis. A few more additions to their fund, like that made by the late benevolent Godfrey Haga, would soon place the Northern Dispensary on this desirable footing. This legacy, together with that bequeathed by the late John Fries, several life subscriptions of thirty dollars each, and the sum of seven hundred dollars, funded at a former period, have been placed at interest. During the year, an attempt has been made to lay the foundation of a Medical Library, donations for which, either in money or books, will be gratefully received. The inquiry proposed by the managers, as to the practicability of establishing a Dispensary-house, we should presume, might, without hesitation, be answered in the affirmative. Among a population of twenty thousand, as intelligent and public spirited as are those to which the "Northern Dispensary" looks for support, there unquestionably may be found a sufficient number of charitably disposed persons, in affluent or sufficiently easy circumstances, to establish this valuable institution, beyond the probability of its future decline, and this too without any privation of personal or other enjoyments: indeed what purer or more desirable enjoyment can they indulge in, than that of administering to the wants and afflictions of the sick and destitute—the noble privilege of doing good. Let the managers but persevere, and a general co-operation on the part of a generous public will no doubt accompany them. They state that the whole field of their labours has lately been divided into six parts, and they have allotted to each of the attending physicians his appropriate district—this is a good regulation, and from it considerable advantage may be expected to flow.

The fifth annual meeting of the Philadelphia Mercantile Library Association was held on the 12th inst. when the yearly Report was submitted to the members. The receipts for the past year amounted to $345, and in the same period 62 volumes and 5 daily papers have been added to the Library, and also 47 new members have joined the society. Since its establishment, it has received 427 members, and the present number of volumes is 1500, exclusive of pamphlets. The number of readers borrowing books in the past year, was 100, and the visitors to the reading rooms have considerably increased. The value of their library is estimated at nearly $3000. A new organization has been proposed for the purpose of increasing the library and the number of members.

GRAND PECTORAL SYRUP.

FOR the cure of Colds, Coughs, Asthmas, and Consumption of the Lungs. The public are respectfully informed, that this syrup has obtained a character which needs no puffing to establish. It has been used with signal benefit by great numbers, as well as this City as in Boston, New York, and other places, certificates of which might easily be adduced. Many respectable Physicians have approved and recommended it, as a very valuable and safe Medicine. It has been known to cure, after many other remedies had failed. Many in my neighborhood can testify that it is not only useful in the various complaints of the breast, but also in bowel complaints and Ague. It may be taken with a little milk or almost any drink. The quantity to be used is as follows: to a full grown person, a large wine glass full three times a day, and to proportion to the age, for children, directions will be given when called for. At this season it is calculated to be of very general benefit. The ancestor of the Duke of Leeds was a young man named Osborne, who served his apprenticeship to Sir William Hewitt, who was Lord Mayor of London in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Sir William lived on London Bridge, and his daughter during Edward Osborne's apprenticeship, accidentally fell from her father's window into the Thames. Osborne plunged after the young lady, and saved her life at the risk of his own. This act added much to the favourable opinion which the master had for the apprentice, and as soon as the latter had served his time, Sir William Hewitt said to him—"Osborne, you are a deserving youth, and have faithfully served me for seven years. I am under considerable obligations to you—you have saved the life of my only daughter at the peril of your own. You have then the best claim to her—she is at your service, if you choose to accept of her in marriage, and the most considerable part of what I am possessed of shall hereafter be yours. Osborne gladly accepted the generous offer, and the eldest son of that marriage was Hewitt Osborne, who was knighted by the earl of Essex, under whom he served in Ireland, for his services in the field. The family soon after became ennobled. Thomas Osborne the first Duke of Leeds, was prouder of the circumstance of his ancestor having acquired wealth and station by his honest and intrepid spirit, than he was of any of the subsequent services of the family, and related the circumstance with conscious pride to Charles II.

[From the Boston Medical Intelligencer.]

FLANNEL.

From a review of the different substances worn next the skin, it would appear that wool has greatly the advantage over others.—Flannel, by its gentle stimulus on the skin, has the beneficial effect of keeping the pores in a state the most favorable to perspiration. In flannel, the discharge by perspiration proceeds uniformly; but not so in linen, when soiled with the moister of the skin.—The different effects of flannel and linen are particularly perceptible during brisk exercise. When the body is covered with the former, though perspiration be necessarily increased, the perspired matter passes off through flannel into the atmosphere or air, and the skin remains dry and warm. If the same exercise be taken in linen shirts, perspiration as in the former case, is indeed also increased, but the perspired matter, instead of being dispersed into the atmosphere, remains upon the linen, and not only clogs the pores but gives a disagreeable sensation.

Flannel has another advantage which merits attention. As it does not retain the humours discharged from the skin, people who perspire profusely in flannel shirts will not easily catch cold on going into the open air. But the same is not the case in respect of linen shirts, which by retaining the perspired matter, will occasion a sensation of chilliness, often followed by a violent cold, and sometimes even fatal effects.

The prejudices of people have been much excited, both in favor of flannel and against it. It has been objected, that flannel worn next to the skin occasions weakness by too much increasing perspiration: but this objection seems not to be founded in truth, since perspiration scarcely ever can be immoderate or hurtful, long as the skin remains dry.

Flannel, when first used, is often apt to cause an uneasy sensation, but this soon goes off. In those who wear flannel, the skin, on being much rubbed, will become red and inflamed; but we ought not on that account, to infer that flannel produces cutaneous eruption; on the contrary, by preserving the pores open, and increasing perspiration, it tends greatly to remove the cause of cutaneous eruptions, which arise chiefly from an irregular state of that discharge through the pores of the skin.

The prejudice against the use of flannel next to the skin seems to be owing, in great measure, to the effects which ensue from not changing it sufficiently often; but this objection is to be imputed to the wearer, not to the flannel itself.

It must be acknowledged, that the advantages abovementioned strongly recommend the use of flannel as a preservative of health, particularly to those who are exposed to all kinds of weather. It has an additional advantage of being suitable to all seasons, and of compensating a deficiency of upper dress. Extraordinary beneficial effects have been experienced from flannel in a variety of cases. In gouty, and particular rheumatic habits, it has operated with singular advantage. In obstinate coughs, where symptoms of consumption were apparent, it has proved highly serviceable; and upon the whole, it merits a more general and extensive application than it has ever yet obtained.

SWAIM'S PANACEA.

THIS valuable Medicine has obtained a distinction which its efficacy alone can support. As a purifier of the blood it has no parallel. It is the most useful spring and autumn alterative ever known. All those who are affected with Scrofula, Leprosy, Scurvy, or cutaneous Eruptions, or any of these melancholy diseases arising from impurity of the blood and juices—also, those who suffer by diseased Liver, Rheumatic affections, or from indistention of their bowels, or those whose constitutions are broken down by mercurial, antimonial, or arsenical medicines, should submit to a course of Swaim's Panacea. The effect of this Medicine is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, and requires only the common restraints of moderation in diet. It is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral so often occasions, &c.

In all complicated cases of Scrofula and Syphilis, and where the Syphilitic Virus of the patient causes a development of Scrofula in the child, this is the only remedy upon which a single hope of recovery can be reasonably founded; there has been no instance of its failure, when properly used. It imparts vigour to the whole system while the cure is going on—a operation seldom fevered for in vain by the medical world; at the same time the patient is enabled to take nourishing food, which under the common modes of practice, is usually withheld from the sufferer. In many instances where the horrible ravages of ulceration had laid bare fragment and bone, and where, to all appearance, no human means but amputation could have saved life; in cases extreme as even here described, have patients been established from the grave and restored to good health, and the devouring disease completely eradicated. The discovery of a remedy like this now offered for sale has been a desideratum from time immemorial.

The Proprietor does not suppose his bare assertion will convince: he will therefore give references to such as have been cured, and those under his care, among whom are many highly respectable citizens, that shall satisfy the most incredulous of its superior efficacy in the disorders for which it is here recommended. Every member of society should aid in diffusing information of this discovery—humanity alone makes it a duty.

CERTIFICATES.

"I have, within the last two years had an opportunity of seeing several cases of very inveterate ulcers, which, having resisted previously the regular modes of treatment, were healed by the use of Mr. Swaim's Panacea; and I do believe, from what I have seen, that it will prove an important remedy in scrofulous venereal and mercurial diseases." CAUTION TO PURCHASERS.

The great demand and wonderful success of this medicine, has induced a number of persons to imitate it in various ways. Some are selling Sarsaparilla and other syrups, imposing them on the ignorant for the Panacea; others are mixing the genuine medicine with molasses, &c. making three bottles out of one—thus retailing some of its virtues. These imitations and adulterations have, in many instances, protracted the sufferings of patients, in cases where the genuine medicine would have proved instantly efficacious.—I therefore deem it a duty I owe the public, to acquaint them, that it is impossible, from the very nature of its constituents, to be discovered by chemical analysis; and, consequently, that all other mixtures represented to be mine, and sold as such, are fraudulent and base imposition, calculated to deceive the ignorant and unwary. The genuine medicine has my signature on a label, representing Hermes holding the Hydra—a copy of which is on the cover.

Price $3 per bottle, or $30 per dozen.

Communications, post paid, and orders from any part of the world, will receive immediate attention.

TROTTER'S
PECTORAL BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

COUGHS and Colds, even in their first stages not only affect the lungs, and debilitate the constitution, but absolutely destroy them. Persons afflicted with Coughs or Colds, gratefully presume they will subside spontaneously, but how vain is this presumption! Such persons do in the language of the learned and admirable Armstrong, forget they are

On the source
Of fatal woe, a Cough that foams with blood,
Asthmas, and inflammation of the lungs
Or the slow miseries of the hectic fire.

The true cause of these complaints, namely Coughs and Colds, is a suppression of perspiration. The cold, the damp, the wet weather, or the frequent changes which take place in the atmosphere, occasion the body to become affected. In consequence of that, the pores and outlets of the skin, which in time of health are always breathing out a fine fluid, become so shut up, that the perspirable matter, instead of circulating freely through the system, recoils upon the blood, fills the vessels superabundantly and creates its quantity. Hence originates the Cough or Cold, though slight, settles upon the lungs, then terminates in Habitual Cough, or confirmed asthma, or inflammation of the Lungs, or in the calamitous disorder of a Consumption.

About 2000 years has the lively (Horehound) been which the PECTORAL BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is prepared, been held in the highest estimation. In old Coughs, recent and long standing asthmas this medicine is decidedly the most safe and effectual remedy. Persons afflicted with Wheezing or Hoarseness, a strangleness of the breast accompanied with Cough, or Difficulty of Breathing, slight Coughs or Colds, cannot have recourse to a more excellent bird cure, in the disorders of Consumptions, and against the calamitous effects of which it is also peculiarly excellent. It creates appetite in the consumptive individual, and nourishes the constitution of those persons which have been shattered by a distressing Cough, a severe Cold, &c. &c. and invigorates so as to restore them to the blessings of pristine health and vigor.

The true Pectoral Balsam of Horehound is sold in Philadelphia, by SMITH & PEARSALL, Market street, and ELLIS & GRIFFITH, Chesnut street; in New York, by HULL & BOWNE, Pearl street, and O. HULL & Co. 241 Broadway. oct 22—3m

☞ IMPORTANT!

IN the event of the loss of that invaluable and highly ornamental covering, the HAIR, through sickness or other causes, to be recalled to renew and preserve its growth, must be a desirable consideration to those concerned. Such is the established efficacy of

Elliott's Hair Restorative

Upon the capillary system. A very few applications of it, where baldness prevails, will be productive of a covering of young hair, resembling the fine capillaments perceivable in the centre of a flower, growing up within a plant. It eradicates from the system, the Scurf or Dandruff, which so frequently accumulates around the roots and ultimately destroys the hair; and by its capillaric influence upon the capillary vessels in all cases of renewed growth, the hair will become Healthy and Thick, and acquire additional luster. It may be safely, and with good effect, applied to the heads of infants or children, whose hair is scarce or deficient.

HEAD-ACHE.

Its emollient, cooling, gently stimulating, and delicately aromatic properties, renders Elliott's Hair Restorative a superior Capillary Vegetable Lotion. Its effects, as experienced by many subject to nervous headaches, or occasional pains in the head, feverish heat, &c. (which in many instances, causes the hair to fall off) warrants its recommendation, in such cases, as a most benign remedy.
